New Caledonia

An international music spot

The arena of the South in Païta has hosted world-famous artists such as James Blunt or Maitre Gims but it does not prevent New Caledonia sharing its own talents worldwide. The festival season ignites the Caledonian stages with international guests and local artists.

Every year, New Caledonia vibrates to the rhythm of rock, punk, funk and jazz, while discovering more talents.

In New Caledonia, local and international artists frequently share the stage during musical events, offering the public a mix of genres, practices, and different universes to the delight of residents, but also for Australians or New Zealanders who come to major New Caledonian festivals such as the Francofolies, the Blackwoodstock Rock Festival, the Women Funk Festival, the Summer Jazz Festival...

Caledonian music travels internationally

The cultural richness of the Caledonian territory is transmitted through established artists such as Edou and its flagship titles "Oceania" or "Shipwrecked Islands", but also thanks to young talents.

Voices like those of Julia Paul and Gulaan cross the oceans to represent New Caledonia in The Voice or Music Explorer, impressing the jury of these famous competitions.

Recently, the 19-year-old self-taught Caledonian beatmaker, Nuka collaborated with American singer Jason Derulo for the track Love Not War, a international hit.
